SURPLUS list of
"PUGET SOUND PEONIES"

"Thousands of Seattle's choicest roses as well as every other variety of flowers that bloom in Seattle gardens greeted the eyes of visitors when the show was opened yesterday morning. * * * Some of the exhibits that attracted the most attention were 75 varieties of native wild flowers entered by F. S. Hall, director of the University Museum, and 150 varieties of peonies entered by Professor Ivan W. Goodner, of the University of Washington Law School."

Seattle Post-Intelligencer, June 19, 1924.

At the exhibition above referred to, which was visited by between fifteen and twenty-thousand persons, we were awarded the first prize for peonies in each of the following five classes, the only ones in which we entered:

25 or more named varieties, double, one bloom each.

6 specimen blooms, double, one variety.

(In this class we entered six each of the following varieties: La France, Sarah Bernhardt, Philippe Rivoire, Evening Glow, Cherry Hill, Lady Alexandra Duff, Therese, Walter Faxon, Georgiana Shaylor, Frances Shaylor, Mary Brand, Phyllis Kelway and Suzette.)

Best Peony in the show: Mons. Jules Elie.

Best collection of Japanese varieties.

Best collection of new varieties.

At our peony gardens at Haller Lake (one and three-fourths miles north of Seattle city limits), there are growing more than 200 varieties of peonies, including practically all of the world's tested introductions that have been found worthy. Many of these are extremely scarce, expensive and difficult to procure. The gardens have been enriched by direct importations from European originators and by true stock procured from American originators and introducers. It has been our aim to grow here every worth-while peony, and it will be seen by a comparison with the ratings of the American Peony Society, that not one of the six hundred or more of the low-rated and inferior varieties is in this collection. The rarest and most expensive aristocrats of the various types and the higher grades of the moderate cost peonies are all here.

In September and October of this year we will have a few surplus plants to spare among those for which a price is given in this list. Where no price is stated it should be understood that we have none to spare. We have had pleasure in giving friends peonies but have never until now sold a root.

In 1921 the American Peony Society took a vote of its members upon the merits of varieties grown in America, adopting the number 10 as representing the most nearly perfect peony. Some six hundred varieties which by that vote received an average grade of below 7 were recommended to be discarded, as distinctly inferior. Some of the introductions since 1918 were grown by so few as to make it impossible to secure a vote that would fairly represent an average opinion, and these are not as yet rated. The figures at the left of the variety name in the list, give the rating here mentioned. It will be seen that LeCygne and Mrs. Edward Harding each rank 9.9, while Therese and Kelway's Glorious score 9.8 and Solange 9.7, but any variety rating 8.5 is very high grade, and almost all of these better ones, with an occasional exception, such as Festive Maxima, 9.3, were introduced within the past fifteen or twenty years. A variety rated in the vicinity of 8.0 is sure to be good. The perfume of most of the modern peonies is not surpassed by the fragrance of the rose; and with the delicately tinted varieties, if the bloom is cut just as the first petals begin to unfold and allowed to open indoors it will reveal the most lovely tints and shadings imaginable and not discoverable if the flower opens in the sunshine.

Planting should be done as early as possible, in September or October, or even later, but preferably before the ground has become cold. Place the root in good, rich, mellow soil; allow no manure of any kind to come in direct contact with any part of it; the root should be carefully firmed in the soil so that the eyes will be about two inches below the general level of the ground after the soil has settled; keep the ground as well cultivated as one would for potatoes; and carefully mulch the ground over the roots the first winter, to keep the roots from heaving.

Great care will be taken to send true stock, but in case of error, my liability is understood to be limited to replacement with true variety. Delivery charges will be prepaid on all orders of $5. or more. A cash discount of 5% will be allowed on orders of $50. or more and 10% on orders of $100. or more. I carry no accounts and in accordance with general custom request that cash accompany order.

SIZE OF ROOTS

I do not believe in planting diminutive divisions, with a single eye. Such roots are often split lengthwise, resulting usually in having to wait several years for the first bloom, if the plant survives at all. My experience has led me to the conclusion that a strong well-balanced root system is the all-important thing in planting peonies, and the plants furnished will in general have three or more eyes, but it should be understood that the roots of certain varieties are much smaller than others, and that in the cases of the extremely scarce and expensive varieties, such, for example, as Kelway's Glorious, LeCygne, and all of the Japanese varieties, the roots may not show as many eyes as the plants in general. Under the federal importation regulations I am not at liberty before 1926 to sell the newly originated varieties except in the form of divisions grown by me and cut from the original plant. This applies to all the introductions of 1920, 1921 and 1922, imported from France, where they were originated by Mons. Auguste Dessert. These divisions will necessarily be small, though none but satisfactory roots will be allowed to go out.

Shipments will begin early in September, continuing until orders are filled in rotation.

I take pleasure in inviting you to join the American Peony Society and receive its quarterly bulletins, teeming with items of interest for the peony enthusiast. Applications should be sent, with $3.00 annual dues, to Henry S. Cooper, Treasurer, Kenosha, Wis.
